HP and Nuance SafeCom solutions at work

A leading global consulting and technology company found that its outmoded fleet of printers and copiers could no longer cope with heavy use in three European offices. Problems included recurring, unplanned maintenance and poor output quality. The operations manager also found that employees requested their own printers for confidentiality reasons. With 17 different printer models, device management was a challenge. Taking a fresh viewpoint, the firm deployed 142 HP MFPs, 75 HP Color LaserJet printers, and SafeCom Pull Printing and Rule-Based Printing modules. With this approach, the fleet size decreased 30 percent, and employees now have a better understanding of overall costs. To preserve data privacy, workers use either proximity or swipe cards to initiate print jobs. Additionally, print costs are down 20 percent because employees no longer leave uncollected documents at printers.
