Solution Brief

Scan to anywhere in the office

HP Scanjets and Silex® Technology network solutions

Maximise productivity by sharing HP scanners over your wired or wireless local area network

Unrealised capacity

Are you using your dedicated scanner to its full potential? Having your scanner directly connected to a single computer can create a number of access issues. Neither requesting a document scan from the primary user of the computer nor moving the scanner and connecting it to a different computer is always practical. At the same time, for many offices, the cost of a networked scanner that can be shared among multiple users is prohibitive.

Cost-effective sharing

HP has you covered. Now you can connect your HP scanner to your office wired or wireless local area network (LAN) with affordable, easy-to-use and reliable Silex USB Device Servers. You can help maximise your office productivity while minimising your technology capital investment.

HP's collaboration with Silex Technology means you can depend on compatibility between HP Scanjets and Silex network solutions. You can count on quick, reliable network connections and a familiar user experience similar to a direct USB connection.

Designed for productivity

Silex SX Virtual Link technology allows each computer to recognise the scanner as a local device. This creates a user experience nearly identical to a local USB connection, including scanner software and tool compatibility.

SX Virtual Link software is available for Windows and Macintosh. Servers are also supported, which enables USB devices to be operating inside Virtual Machines like VMware, Citrix Xen, Microsoft HyperV and other virtualised environments or environments with terminal servers or thin clients.

Smart features like Request use and Automatic disconnect after time-out makes sharing across your busy office easier. If the scanner is engaged by another user, you can choose to notify users to disconnect. If the connected user does not respond within a pre-defined length of time, the scanner is automatically disconnected. This helps free up the scanner for the next user, so that your office can stay productive.
